HIGHLIGHT GOLF COURSE OF THE MONTH!

Veterans Memorial Golf Course

While there are many amazing lakes and state parks in our great state of Georgia, one of the best destinations you can visit is Lake Blackshear. Enjoy fishing, camping, canoeing, and more. Of course, you'll want to pack your golf clubs as well.

Veterans Memorial Golf Course is a hidden gem. It may not be tour-caliber in design or difficulty, but it's still a great track for a relaxing round while enjoying the area. Early morning seems to be one of the best times to play. We teed off early on a Sunday, and there were hardly any players in sight.

While some of the course conditions were not perfect-the greens had taken a bit of a hit in places-the overall conditions were great. I'm not a fan of multiple fairways lined up side by side repeatedly, but I like how the course weaves its way along the lake's contours. However, having more visual exposure to the lake would increase its allure. While some aspects of the course design are a bit plain at times, the challenge is suitable for players of all levels striving for par. Tournament players, however, may find it less challenging due to the shorter overall length, which favors big hitters. They can throw wedges into greens all day long, as most greens lack PGA Tour-level defenses. But not all golf is designed for the tour level, right?

Bonuses include a full driving range to warm up at. A view of the train at times will delight kids, and a well-equipped clubhouse makes it a great location for fundraising events and family golf outings. The TIF 419 fairways, in excellent condition, keep the ball up off the hard clay, making for a fun day for less-skilled players. Three knuckles up for this one!

Try This and Hope It Works.. NO THANK YOU by

The world of golf is flooded with gadgets, tricks, quick fixes and ideas peddled by those eager to make a quick fortune. Everything about P45 and my 25 years of study is the exact opposite. I've worked with countless players and have witnessed the damage caused when they chase the "magic" down rabbit holes. There are many reasons these gimmicks fail-too many for one article to cover fully. The primary issue is that these ideas are rooted in theory, not fact. No concrete evidence supports their origins. Let's dive into an example.

Stack and Tilt has to be one of the biggest "gigs" to gain a massive following. Its core ideas are intriguing, no doubt. However, the reality of what it presents and how it translates for most players is flawed. The central concept is to eliminate weight transfer to the back leg during the golf swing, encouraging players to stay centered over the front leg, turn and tilt upward through the swing. I can understand the theory behind this. However, in a forward-moving motion driven by a kinematic sequence to maximize both accuracy and distance eliminating weight shift compromises fundamental principles of athletic motion.

Consider throwing a ball. If you didn't step back and then forward to initiate movement could you throw with accuracy and maximum power? Experience tells us no-it's not the most effective approach. Lower-body motion, transitioning from back to front, is a cornerstone of athletic movement. Think of an NFL quarterback criticized for throwing off the back foot or failing to plant the front foot properly to advance the pass. Major League Baseball players are trained to step back, then forward, planting the lead leg to optimize their motion. This is the first flaw in Stack and Tilt.

The second, more concerning issue is that many who claim to be "swinging the Stack and Tilt way" aren't even close to doing so correctly. When I show them on camera, not only is their technique incorrect, but it's often significantly detrimental. The most common problem I see is players excessively tilting their upper spine forward past the front leg at the top of the swing, leaving the club so out of position that it creates major downswing delivery issues. So, be cautious when chasing these theories. Without proper guidance, things can go very wrong, and even if you execute the moves correctly they may still defy the basics of athletic motion.

GOLF SCHOOL

by Ryan Carpenter

Did you know?

Short game is half the score for a great player. So 36 is a baseline. You have about 36 chances to get it right. If you can hit the ball off the tee and advance to the green or forward into the "short game zone" then you now have 2 shots on average to make it count. If you go above that number you are quickly elevating your game to 90 fast. Think about if you added just one putt or one chip to every hole. That is 18 extra strokes!! That is no way to improve and see the handicap come down. That is a scoring killer and needs to be figured out right away.

I have a series of tests designed to help players figure this out. Part of the issue is skill based and part of it is approach. Find out what your number is and why its too high!!!
